IGV, getting even closer to people

Over 300 guests among customers, suppliers and employees, took part into the IGV Group Open Day, the Italian company with a leading role in the manufacture of lifts and DomusLift® lifting platforms

31/07/2013 - On 12 July, IGV Group opened the doors of its plants to customers, suppliers, employees' families and press in order to show the new manufacturing process and assets, costing an investment of 3.5 million euros.

IGV Open Day was not only focused on technology and design, but a celebration for the friends of a company which is bravely challenging the current economical crisis.

The mayor of Vignate, Emilio Vergani, was the special guest. In his speech, he thanked eng. Giuseppe Volpe, 83 years, Group founder and president, for keeping his entrepreneurial business in Vignate, without delocalising. This is even more important if we think that IGV, besides having a leading role in Italy, exports abroad more than 65% of the products.

"Our choice was against the general trend- eng. Giuseppe Volpe explained - because in times of economic crisis we invested in technology innovation and new professional resources, keeping our premises in Italy."

"Laser machines and machines for the automated folding of metal sheet panels have been deployed" – the company CEO, Matteo Volpe, 47 years, explained – "allowing time-saving and enhanced accuracy over the manufacturing process. Machines can operate 24/7 without human supervision."

After the plant tour, the Open Day changed into a party for employees and their families, children included.
